One of the homeliest men in Paris has a beautiful little girl about five years old. The other day she was sitting on his lap with a handkerchief before her. She looked at her father a moment then looked at herself, and turned to her mother. "Mamma," she inquired, "did I ever make me?"

Then she looked another look in glass at herself.

FOREVER AND FOREVER

Two little streamlets began and flowed,
And sang their songs together.
They felt like the Summer days,
And here the stormy weather.
The softness blossomed from them both
In colors rich and rare.
And in each stream the song birds wooed
Their bright reflections there.
And on, and on, and on they danced,
Each hoping toward the river,
And then they met in lake and part
Forever and forever.

Two human lives, two kindred hearts,
By destiny decreed,
Met in the spring of life to learn
In deepest mystery,
They dreamed their future lives
Through far extended weather.
They opened love's bewitching book,
And read it through together.
They saw in the mother's eye
A deep unspoken love,
And from each other's lips they took
Love's ever ready kiss.

And then the fate that could not turn
The sweetest dream to dust,
Turned hope's glad music to a dirge,
In glory to a dirge.
It stepped between them and
The love it could not kill.
It bade them and suffer still
And love and suffer still.
They met with outstretched hands as again
And loved, anything, never.
The voice of destiny replied
"Forever and forever."

Mine is no life, I thought,
No life fancy flight,
It lives through daylight's hours,
And hants the night.
The world of sorrow fill the air
It rains, it crosses never.
It wings some soul, it breaks some heart,
Forever and forever.

TROLLEYS FOR FARM

The Many Uses to Which Electricity Could Be Put in the Country.
From Illinois it is announced that plans have been perfected for an experimental trolley plant in the rich prairie farming country, where electricity was used only for supplying city passenger transportation but for performing farm work as well. This opens endless possibilities for the trolley system, and the success in this experiment will be watched with great interest.

The advocates of the trolley plant say that in a good farming country where there is a creditable amount of stock to be hauled to the city, it is entirely practicable to establish a central power house, and from this to generate electricity for a number of uses. The wires could be run along the main road from power house situated on one end, and from this extend branches in the directions as the business of the warrant. Aside from the carrying of passengers, which would be conducted in the same way as now, the electric railway connecting with some steam railroad, the electric current would be used in a variety of other ways.

With traction wagons, such as are more common in the West than here, all the hauling of the neighborhood could be done. It would require no change in the construction of the farm wagons, for they could be hauled as now and picked up along the road by the traction wagon. The only limit to the number of wagons that could be taken in one train would be the power and strength of the hauling machinery. All the traction would have to do would be to have the load made up in the morning and stay at home and attend to his work while his wagon was taken to town in the electrical train and the contents disposed of there. In summer there would be no limit to the load which he could haul, for at any time except the season of the wagon. Most of his work could be dispensed with, and shipments could be made more quickly, and in greater quantities than at present.

The use of the power in the trolley wire need not be hauled to traction on the road, it would be wire could be tapped for use, and the power used for farm purposes. The traction engine could be drawn by the trolley instead of horses. The engine could be done without the use of a traveling steam engine, with its expense for fuel and attendants. Even better could be done with electricity and the hauling of the farm work generally reduced.

Carrying the idea still further, it is suggested that country roads be lighted with electricity and electric lights introduced into the farm house, illuminating it brightly and making it more cheerful.

From the standpoint of the urban resident every railroad station of any importance would be connected by trolley railways with the country, lying close to it, and in this way the area of territory available for suburban residences would grow, thus enlarged. Small manufacturing establishments, as well as could have, and from the admission saving the trouble, that now when rats up much of the profits. Electricians look forward to these developments as the natural growth of a few years.—Philadelphia Record.

To Cure a Cold

Cold is considered as the foundation for many of the diseases affecting man as well as domestic animals. A cold cures the body of the skin, the refuse matter of the body that usually comes through that outlet. It cleans the lungs, purges the blood, and thence upon the liver, affecting the stomach, bowels and every function of the system.

To cure a cold, take a large dose of Chamberlain's German Liver Powder at bed time. It will clean the bowels, stimulate the liver and aid digestion. Then take ten grains of quinine, and in a few days, or in some cases, a hot bath, or in some cases, a hot steam bath, will cure the cold on the following day.

It will be cured. This treatment is not a hot steam bath, but a hot bath. It will be cured. This treatment is not a hot steam bath, but a hot bath. It will be cured. This treatment is not a hot steam bath, but a hot bath.

A White Fever.
There was a man crossing the street. Well, I am greatly indebted to you, and indeed I can't tell you how much I owe him. One thing is certain—I never can repay him.

Stick Headache.
Nervous or sick headache is usually caused by derangement of the stomach. The "stomachic" cure is an excellent one. Chamberlain's German Liver Powder is the best. It will cure the stomach and the liver, and the head.

Start your nose tastes and his abilities. It is a very easy matter to make something out of nothing by putting a little of this or that. A lion is no better than a lamb. If it were God would have made him a lion. If you buy a bull for a plow horse don't spoil the plow horse trying to make him a racer. He will not do either one, and he will be spoiled in disposition for anything. This is the way to make the best of the talents that are given him and he will be a credit to himself and to you.—Home.
